

Ashley Sneed, APRN-CNP, MPH is a family nurse practitioner at The Ohio State University Wexner Center in the Department of Family and Community Medicine. She has been practicing as nurse practitioner for 12 years. In her clinical practice, she has a passion for wellness and preventive care which allows her to empower patients to seek optimal health. She is a 2021 MPH graduate (Program for Experienced Professionals) from The Ohio State University with a focus in population health management and leadership. She is putting her MPH training to use and participating in quality improvement activities to help improve outcomes for patients with hypertension. In addition to her clinical and quality improvement work, she participates in research as well. She is part of a research team conducting a study on the relationship between overweight/obesity and body image in African American women.